Senate Controversy Proves Pictures Supplemental to Press.

The moving picture episode in the United States Senate last week brought prominently before the public one phase of film development that has been given practically no attention. The film, in addition to making a place for itself beside the stage, has also firmly established itself as the twin brother of the newspaper. The controversy be-United States and Senator Overman. of the Senate Committee on Rules, established this fact beyond a doubt The idea of turning the Senate chamber into a moving picture It does not seem to comport with the dignity of the Senate. But when that the photographing of the Senate chamber with the Vice President as the describing of the actions of the Senators and their presiding ofnewspapers, it puts the matter in an entirely different light. Further photographing of the Senate chamber with a motion picture camera Senate chamber, than a description you establish the right of the cameraman to take pictures of the Senate when and how, he pleases so long as he does not interrupt public business.

the press in spreading information, rights and privileges that are accorded the newspapers belong to the more unseemly or undignitied for motion pictures to be made of the be made of Pennsylvania avenue. will actually wait upon the motion eture camera to be placed in read-ness to record it. It will not be long before every occasion of mo-ment in the history of the world dil be recorded on film by man date of the law in exactly the same way wordy descriptions of such actions are recorded on paper and stored away in some musty place to accumulate dust.

The minute the dignity of any body of men or any institution of men becomes so great that it is endangered by the filming of the men the institution in action, just int minute its dignity becomes to great for ordinary human intellince to grasp, and there is no ocordinary human beings are compellto live. Nothing that has so far appened on earth is too dignified be pictured. The inauguration of President, the coronation of a ng, the funeral of a Pope, the eat masses of people for any pure whatsoever, the laying of all of these things have been file in various government dethose departments that could shown in any other way-or so well. The people of this country e entitled to know exactly how conducts its bus ness. And now that its individual members, is required to ask the people of the seem at all out of place that the enate should permit itself to be all the people through the agency of the fflm, any more than it would injure the dignity of the Senate to have articles printed in the newspapers about them. The sooner realization comes to the people that the moving picture camera is not a toy but the most scientific instrument for recording the exact facts of history that has yet been developed, just that much soon er the motion pictures will secure the recognition that is their due and much of the controversy and prejudice now in existence will be elimi-G. Co-operate With Your Butcher

By MRS. CHRISTINE FREDERICK.

NE of the things that seem to have been overlooked in this recurring discussion of high cost of food is the fact that few women are well acquainted with the different cuts of meats. "A skirt steak," said a woman in a surprised tone, as she heard another woman in the butcher's store asking such a thing" "And what is an aitch bone? That is somehting new to me." Each large center has slightly different ways of cutting beef, lamb and pork. There is the Chicago, the New York and the Philadelphia style of cut by which local butchers give slightly different terms to pieces of meat which are not always cut in the same way. as elsewhere. But any butcher worthy the name will De glad to co-operate with an interested customer and assist her through the intricacies of learning to distinguish hind from fore quarters. It is to his interest to have a satisfied customer and helping her to know more about meat will teach her how to buy more intelligently and thus more satisfactorily. In certain sections, Friday is one of the best days in which to see a local butcher cut up meat for the week end, because so many people buy fish on Friday that it leaves the butcher more time and so he is then willing to talk and demonstrate.

If before seeing the actual animal cut the housewife will spend half an hour studying a good diagram showing where the various cuts are located, she will get her knowledge more easily and rapidly. Almost every cook book with a chapter on marketing includes diagrams showing the various sections by numbers. Such a chart will fix points clearly in the mind and connect the While every housekeeper knows steak, chops and roasts, she is unfamiliar with that extensive territory from which come the cheaper cuts. The rump, the chuck, the navel, the brisket, the flank, the clod, all these are sections about whose nutritive value and actual appearance the average housekeeper knows little. I have often surprised visitors with a simple rolled and stuffed flank steak or its near neighbor, the skirt steak, which carries a high amount of nutrition, but winch generally sells for the low price of 16 cents per pound even during high price pe-riods. The short ribs are a section too little used, and then wrongly. and almost entirely for soups, whereas it offers delicious possibilities for casseroles and long-cooking dishes. A leg chop is not asked for as frequently as the loin or rib, yet it has more meat and less waste per pound. The lower part of the shinbone has more gelatine, and hence is more valuable for soup-making than the upper portion, but how few housekeepers know it?

As one butcher said to me recently, "I could save women hun-dreds of dollars if they would only let me show them how to buy." His chief point was that women buy in a hand-to-mouth mannersteak today, chops tomorrow, and a stew the next day. By having in mind two or three meals at one time, such a piece of meat could be bought that would naturally divide into three but which when bought in one solid portion, could be secured for several cents less per pound. instance, a loin of pork may cost 18 or 20 cents, but the chops are sold separately for 22 or 24 cents. A leg of lamb doing three meals costs less if bought in the piece than if the same chops, roast, and scrag ends were bought separately. The useless tall or the porterhouse can be chopped with a little additional meat at the same time of buying and thus do for a second meal instead of beig a waste. More careful planning of meals, better understanding of meat cuts would lower living costs.
